When the journey ahead is full of life-changing choices, compassionate care makes all the difference. This is the experience patients receive at New York Breast Reconstruction and Aesthetic Plastic Surgery (NYBRA), where cutting-edge surgical expertise and a commitment to whole-patient well-being come together.

“No woman wants a mastectomy,” says Randall Feingold, M.D., founding partner of NYBRA. A renowned expert in breast reconstruction and microsurgery, Dr. Feingold understands that undergoing a mastectomy is never an easy choice. “It’s a frightening decision, especially when faced with a breast cancer diagnosis or genetic mutation that puts their health at risk,” he notes.

Backed by decades of combined experience, NYBRA’s skilled surgeons perform state-of-the-art procedures with minimal recovery time and natural results. The team employs advanced microsurgical techniques that rebuild breast tissue using fat transplanted from the abdomen (DIEP flaps), thighs (PAP flaps), or buttocks (GAP flaps) in lieu of implants.

Through nerve grafting procedures, surgeons restore patients’ sensation, creating results that look and feel authentic—something Dr. Feingold says resonates with patients. “Seeing women connect with their reconstructions, we create more than a facsimile reproduction of their breasts. We help women overcome a painful experience through authentically restoring their bodies,” he says.

For many patients, the path to healing requires more than physical recovery. “We recognize mastectomies impact their sense of femininity, their sensuality, and their identities as women and mothers,” he adds. “We understand it takes more than an operation to make them feel whole again. Through our Patient Empowerment Program, our staff nurtures patients along their surgical pathway with additional emotional support,” including preoperative stress management, access to support groups, and an outreach program that connects new patients with those who have undergone similar procedures.

Listening to Our Patients

“One aspect that distinguishes plastic surgery from other disciplines is how dramatically

it improves a patient’s self-esteem. Whether through reconstructive or cosmetic procedures, we’re committed to improving their quality of life,” Dr. Feingold says. With an accredited office operatory and experienced surgical teams on-site, NYBRA patients experience transformational aesthetic procedures and conveniently begin recovery at home that same day.

From breast augmentation using natural body fat to implant removal (explant) with breast lift and fat transfers, the focus is on restoring health and self-confidence. “We treat patients from all over the country who seek properly performed capsulectomies [removal of the scar tissue around breast implants] for breast implant rupture, contractures, recalled textured implants, and other symptoms of breast implant-related illness,” says Dr. Feingold.

NYBRA physicians include Drs. Feingold, Ron Israeli, Peter Korn, David Light, and Jonathan Bank. “We take bedside manner seriously,” he says. “Our patients know we have their best interest at heart, and we’ll make them feel safe, comfortable, and heard at every step. That’s whole-patient care.”
